Enclave is considered a high-risk group due to its involvement in harmful and illegal online activities. The group has ties to harassment networks and behavior that can result in real-world harm, including extortion, exposure of personal information, and swatting incidents.

Affiliations / Activities:

Pornographic networks, UTPP, gore groups, extortion, doxxing, swatting

Enclave poses a serious security risk to communities and individuals. Any interaction may lead to harassment, blackmail, or coordinated attacks.

Members and allies are advised not to engage with Enclave, not to share information or access, and to report any contact or threats immediately.

Enclave has been identified through multiple reports and intelligence reviews as a high-risk group involved in coordinated harassment, intimidation, and criminal-adjacent online activity. The group has documented links to several harmful networks and has repeatedly demonstrated behavior that poses a threat to individual safety and organizational security.

Over the course of the investigation, Enclave members are reported to have engaged in extortion and direct threats against a user known as m77. These actions included coercive messaging, intimidation tactics, and attempts to pressure the individual through fear of exposure or harm. Intelligence indicates that these actions escalated to threats of swatting, which represents a serious real-world danger and is treated as a critical security concern.

In addition to targeting individuals, Enclave members threatened and promoted false or fabricated doxxing claims concerning the Secretary-General of the United Nations. These claims were circulated in an apparent attempt to intimidate leadership, undermine credibility, and provoke fear or instability within the Union. Internal review found no evidence supporting the legitimacy of these doxxing claims, and they are assessed to be deliberately false and malicious in nature.

Throughout confrontations and inquiries, Enclave representatives claimed innocence and denied wrongdoing while avoiding or dismissing documented evidence, including screenshots, logs, and corroborated reports. This pattern of behavior is consistent with avoidance tactics seen in other hostile groups, where denial is used to delay action or discredit investigations rather than address the substance of the allegations.

Enclave is also assessed to have ongoing affiliations with multiple known harmful groups, including UTPP-related networks and communities associated with explicit content, extreme gore, extortion practices, doxxing, and swatting culture. These affiliations significantly increase the risk level associated with the group and suggest access to broader networks capable of coordinated harassment or escalation.

Further intelligence indicates Enclave maintains connections with organizations identified as TNM and DPOS. While both TNM and DPOS publicly claim they do not work closely together or coordinate activities, Union of Nations intelligence contradicts these claims. Available information suggests cooperation, shared members, shared resources, or indirect coordination between these entities. This discrepancy between public statements and observed behavior is noted as a significant credibility concern.

The Union of Nations possesses full documentation of numerous user accounts and IDs associated with Enclave activity. This documentation includes logs, archived messages, timestamps, and cross-server identifiers that establish repeated involvement by the same individuals across multiple incidents. This information is retained internally for security, enforcement, and escalation purposes.

Enclave has been repeatedly linked to organized raid activity involving extreme gore content. These raids appear coordinated rather than spontaneous and are designed to shock, intimidate, and destabilize targeted servers and communities. The use of graphic material as a harassment tool significantly elevates the threat profile of the group and aligns with behavior observed in other high-risk extremist networks.

Based on behavior patterns, affiliations, and documented incidents, Enclave is officially assessed as a high-risk organization. The group demonstrates both intent and capability to cause sustained harm through psychological intimidation, harassment campaigns, and threats that extend beyond online spaces.

Intelligence further indicates ideological and operational overlap with the Universal Union, which is assessed by the Union of Nations as a terrorist organization due to its promotion and normalization of extremist violence, harassment, and coordinated attacks. The Universal Union is known to encourage, glorify, or provide cover for actions such as raids, doxxing threats, and swatting culture, and Enclave's alignment with or support of this organization significantly increases concern.

The promotion and endorsement of such behavior, whether directly or indirectly, demonstrates a disregard for safety and lawful conduct. The relationship between Enclave and the Universal Union is viewed as mutually reinforcing, providing legitimacy, recruitment channels, and ideological justification for harmful actions.

When confronted with evidence, Enclave-affiliated individuals have continued a pattern of denial, deflection, and narrative manipulation, asserting innocence while avoiding engagement with verified proof. This behavior is assessed as intentional and consistent with tactics used to evade moderation, accountability, and enforcement actions.
