

MAIN Document

UTTP&DPOS Groups targeting minors&individuals.

BEWARE.

This is something to be taken important and should be shared to be seen in more eyes.

I am sharing this as I believe this is meant to be shared and taken as a serious note and the FBI to be involved.

These groups target minors, in most important means they target, extort minors out of more nudes and gain advantage of specific things that lead both in criminal records and child safety of being endangered.

There is an individual that has been reaching out to me, and told me about this and asked for help, then i would not be here making this document.

The individual described the attacks from DPOS group:

Doxxing

Finding workplace

Threats of murder

Pizza orders (stupidly massive amounts)

Threats of swatting.

Online targeting, leaking addresses etc.

I have done documentation on both individuals and one of the people will be kept anonymous.

 Full Record of Targeted Abuse Toward SillyPau

Rinchan

oki so, a lot of my experience was similar to what he did with pau to a lesser extent

he raided my discord server to spam stuff but i handled that pretty fast and he er he included me in some revenge porn he made,,
that bit was the most upsetting ;-;

23:30

like yo im just 15, and i know what porn is. but wut???

rinchanlife 🤪

23:30

he would do the same gore spamming, constantly using alts to try to keep harassing me that kinda stuff

a

23:30

rinchanlife 🤪

23:31

that would have been good to know,, i don't wanna get too detailed there anyway but still

23:31

would be okay if you talked to me through a call? dont worry im trying to be as transperent with you as possbiel.

23:32

sorry i'm not comfortable with a call, i can just try my best to articulate over text chat

23:32

oh is cool dw

but yeah as far as i can say he has been just a little inmature twuat to you and is pretty much it i can say?

also do not worry im just a dude that has hes head straight (but sleep depravated)

rinchanlife 🧠

23:33

immature is the last thing i'd call it

23:34

ive seen worse sadly.

rinchanlife 🧠

23:34

oh yeah

23:35

i mean i hope he hasnt sent u child pornography... (ive had to deal with that myself.)

rinchanlife 🧠

23:36

basically what he was doing was because i stood up to him he tried spamming me with the same disgusting content he was spamming pau with in hopes it would make me scared or something

23:37

yeah ive heard the same thing.. sadly m77 told me

rinchanlife 🧠

23:38

he didn't throw any cp at me luckily but he did make several violent threats towards me as well as drawing porn of me which was the only thing i would say really affected me all for that because your trans...

23:39

i already know. be yourself

rinchanlife 🧠

23:39

i will not go into detail about it to avoid thinking about it and because you are a minor but it was extremely violating ive seen dead people, ive seen child pornography. im an online proxy ive seen much worse.

23:40

rinchanlife 🧠

23:40

no, me being trans had nothing to do with it, it was all because he seems to think i'm associated with pau

23:40

its more a 50/50 situation i can say

rinchanlife 🧠

23:41

ok so here's the thing, a minor can't legally consent to that sorta thing with an adult and morally i don't feel comfortable going into detail either understood.

23:41

23:44

apart from that he included me in that big cospypasta of 'doxxing' which mostly contained just old usernames and information that didn't even lead where he thought it did, i was not as heavily targeted as pau and alice but i still received a large amount of harassment from him the small trash talk.

This document provides an overview of my professional experience and observations regarding the activities of the group in question.

I am not a U.S. resident. I work in cybersecurity and penetration testing in partnership with NoTrac3. Based on the information I have received and my own technical analysis, this group presents itself as “e-gangsters” and claims to control approximately 75% of the American online space. In reality, this is largely self-promotional fantasy. Their actual capabilities are limited and technically unimpressive; the operations they conduct could be replicated or surpassed by a skilled practitioner in a matter of minutes.

Methods

Their so-called “hacking” activity consists primarily of basic social engineering. They typically attempt to befriend individuals who know their intended target and, through this interpersonal manipulation, obtain simple personal data such as names and home addresses. These are entry-level tactics, closer to amateur roleplay than serious tradecraft. Their reflex is to align themselves with aggressors and participate in targeting others, a behavior that is both reckless and unprofessional and suggests they are more interested in looking dangerous than actually being effective.

I do not consider their attacks to be credible threats. I have been targeted by them previously, and my assessment is that their operations generate far more noise than measurable impact. From a professional standpoint, they are easy to detect, easy to mitigate, and should not be overestimated. If anything, they function as an unintentional reminder of how low the barrier to calling oneself a “hacker” has become.

Although I possess the technical ability to inflict significant damage, I choose not to do so. I hold the view that cybersecurity skills should be used to make the internet a safer environment for both minors and adults—not to play at being online gangsters with toy-level techniques.

Use of OPSEC, OSINT, and Bot Infrastructure

The group attempts to apply operational security (OPSEC) and open-source intelligence (OSINT) techniques to collect information on individuals. However, their implementation of these methods is superficial and poorly structured, resembling an amateur or “joke” operation rather than a serious threat actor. They imitate the terminology and posture of professional operators, but the execution simply does not match the image they are trying to project.

I have directly observed their bot infrastructure. It appears to have been purchased from an individual operating under the alias “lilrage” on dark-web marketplaces where illegal or contraband goods and services are traded. The infrastructure is functional but minimal. For an operator with real experience, their tooling is neither sophisticated nor original. When confronted with a single technically capable individual, they generally require the involvement of multiple members simply to maintain pressure—a sign of weakness rather than strength.

Motivations and Risks

Their primary motivation appears to be financial gain by any available means. This includes attempts to obtain money, IP addresses, physical addresses, and, in severe cases, highly illegal material such as child sexual abuse material (CSAM), or to coerce victims into taking part in unlawful activities. The combination of low technical competence and high recklessness makes them more dangerous to vulnerable individuals than to any hardened or well-prepared target.

Groups such as DPOS or other UTTP-type collectives engage in conduct that clearly falls within the domain of cybercrime and should be addressed by law-enforcement authorities. Ordinary individuals and well-intentioned “good Samaritans” must not involve themselves in illegal practices, even if they possess the technical capability to do so. Technical knowledge does not confer legal or ethical permission to break the law, and certainly not to compete with groups whose “operations” look like a bad imitation of real cybercrime.

Conclusion

In my professional assessment, the group’s overall approach is short-sighted, irresponsible, and ethically unacceptable. Their activities rely on extortion, blackmail, and harassment, often driven by a distorted sense of power or “entertainment” in their own perception. From a technical and operational standpoint, they are closer to a case study in overconfidence than a serious, high-threat actor.

I do not harbor personal hatred toward them; in fact, I hope they eventually pursue lawful and constructive paths in life. However, their current behavior is dangerous, unethical, and should be handled by the appropriate authorities. At best, they are background noise for professionals in the field; at worst, they are setting themselves up to be an example of what not to do when law enforcement inevitably takes a closer interest in their activities.

MY IDEOLOGY:

<https://primwiki.net/DPOSzism>

Based on a systematic review of the visual material, the images indicate that the group aligns with neo-Nazi ideology and enforces norms that are explicitly racist, homophobic, and otherwise discriminatory. The content further appears to promote and normalize extreme violence, including graphic gore and self-harm (e.g., suicide, self-cutting, and carving the group's name into the bodies of members or associates).
